GRANITE COUNTERTOPS
IT'S THE NATURAL CHOICE.

WELCOME HOME.

IT'S ALL ABOUT THE DETAILS.

Choosing the proper material for a countertop is a big decision and requires that many considerations be taken into account. Appearance, strength, durability, sustainability and, of course, price are key factors in making a choice that will leave the consumer satisfied and, ultimately, proud. Some common options on the market today are plastic laminates, ceramic tile, stainless steel, concrete, natural stones (marble, granite, slate, soapstone) and wood. Each material has its advantages; however, granite seems to have more advantages that make it adaptable to the kitchen.

Granite is an igneous, magma-formed rock that is generally made up of quartz, feldspar and mica. These minerals combine in varying percentages that account for the color, veining and crystallization patterns that make each granite deposit and therefore customized countertop - unique. Other minerals, such as magnetite, pyrite, garnet and hematite can occur in much smaller amounts, and as such, it is these different combinations that create the wide range of granite varieties that are available throughout the world.

Once you have decided to install granite countertops in your home or business, you need to find the right people to help you through the process from start to finish.

You need a professional who knows what is required for installation, is familiar with granite and how it works, and knows how to gather the information and measurements to fabricate the piece correctly. Because natural stone is made from nature, variations should and can be expected. Even though colors in this brochure are as close to the actual blend as possible, photographic and printing techniques - and actual viewing conditions - can alter perception of color.
